

2020 Online International Summer School in Comparative Conflict Studies

June 22 – 27, 2020

Rethinking Peace Education: The Work of Identity and Culture in Conflict Ridden Societies

Dr. Zvi Bekerman

COURSE DESCRIPTION

The course offers a critique of Western positivist paradigmatic perspectives that currently guide peace education, maintaining that one of the primary weaknesses of current bilingual and multicultural approaches to peace education is their failure to account for the primacy of the political framework of the nation state and the psychologized educational perspectives that guide their educational work. It does so by revealing the complex practices implemented, in educational contexts in areas of enduring conflict, while negotiating identity and culture.

The course presents critical theorizations and conceptualizations of identity, culture, conflict, and other foundational concepts derived from a long-term ethnographic study of the integrated bilingual Palestinian-Jewish schools in Israel. These schools' main goal is to offer a new egalitarian, bilingual, multicultural educational option to facilitate the growth of youth who can acknowledge and respect "others" while maintaining loyalty to their respective identitarian and cultural traditions.

Change, it will be argued, will only occur after the Western positivist paradigmatic perspectives that currently guide peace education are abandoned, a step which entails critically reviewing present understandings of the individual, of identity and culture, and of the learning process.

In order to do this, we will first learn about the paradigms and conceptual frameworks which guide our understanding of conflict and multicultural/peace education as they develop in different conflictual, political and geographical contexts and identify a variety of approaches related to various dimensions of peace education. The course will familiarize participants with the complexities of the Israeli Palestinian conflict, with an emphasis on the present situation within its internationally recognized borders. The course will then critically examine sociological, psychological, and anthropological approaches to identity and culture and discuss matters relating to the place of culture and identity in the world of education in general and peace education in particular. Lastly, we will apply the concepts and theories learned to the analysis of data gathered in educational contexts confronting intractable conflicts such as the cases of Israel and Cyprus.

It is important for participants in the course to keep in mind that:

1. Course description cannot, ever, reflect course implementation; descriptions are dead stuff and easy to write but courses are alive and thus unpredictable. (Even more this time since we will be working from afar online :-)
2. Courses should never be confused with reality other than the reality of the course itself.
3. The course builds partially on materials participants are asked to prepare in class (descriptions of their own understandings of identity, culture, conflict, peace, etc.) which become the basis for both theoretical and practical discussions.

PRINCIPLES OF LEARNING AND TEACHING

Given the concentrated nature of the summer course a variety of educational approaches will be adopted. Frontal presentation (supported by PP), close reading of texts, workshop settings, and group discussions.

AIMS

In general encourage intellectual growth and critical perspectives in participating students, more in particular afford students the opportunity to critically consider basic paradigmatic assumptions as these relate to their understanding of identity and culture with an emphasis on their functioning in conflictual contexts.

COURSE OUTLINE BY DAY

DAY 1 - MONDAY, JUNE 22

Synchronous Session 1

- Group introduction and Course introduction
- Main Theoretical Framework: Conflict, Peace, and Peace Education

Readings:

- Zembylas, M., & Bekerman, Z. (2013). Peace education in the present: Dismantling and reconstructing some fundamental theoretical premises. Journal of Peace Education, 10(2), 197-214.

Synchronous Session 2

- Introducing the conflictual sites: Palestinians and Jews in Israel and Greeks and Turks in Cyprus.

Readings:

- Smootha, S. (2010). Arab Jewish Relations in Israel. Washington: United States Institute for Peace, (erişim: 08.12. 2013).
- Loizides, N. G. (2007). Ethnic nationalism and adaptation in Cyprus. International Studies Perspectives, 8(2), 172-189.

(Both sources need not be read in full but will help participants get a basic idea of the development of the respective conflicts)

Asynchronous Session

- Watch: We can't achieve peace without addressing structural violence | Temi Mwale

Temi Mwale, the 4Front Project, talks about the journey of combating street violence, and how she founded a social enterprise that provides the youth with a platform where their voices can be heard.

Discussion Forum: Following write a short note, up to 250 words (or less) indicating if when thinking about peace Education you also thought of street violence as one of the issues to be dealt with by what traditionally is called Peace Education. In case you did not, consider what other issues might relate to peace education which though you know about them you have never thought they might belong there.

Also, consider if Temi Mwale believes (or not) that education is one of the main paths to find solutions to violence.

DAY 2 - TUESDAY, JUNE 23

Synchronous Session 1

- Methodological considerations: Nation and Education
- Methodological nationalism and School and Nation
